310th Bombardment Group
History: January 1944

*For my dad,

*"Lil Dutch"
John T. Fitzgerald, SMSgt, U. S. Air Force (retired)*

12th Air Force, 57th Bombardment Wing 310th Bombardment Group History: January 1944

The following is a compilation of the 310th Bomb Group's Headquarters and individual Squadron War Diaries. They have been transcribed word for word, from the Squadron Histories provided by the Air Force Historical Research Agency (AFHRA), Maxwell Air Force Base Alabama. At the end of each Squadron's daily entry, the individuals cited in the entry are identified by full name, rank and duty, in alphabetical order. The day's entry begins with the Tactical Operations Statement, from the United States Army Air Forces (USAAF) Chronology, for the Mediterranean Theater of Operations (MTO). The history also includes mission reports, mission crew rosters, Missing Air Crew Reports (MACR), personal mission logs, journals, and diaries made available by various sources.

Invitation

Anyone who has documentation pertaining to the 310th Bomb Group or its members, and would like to have it included in this history, is welcome to participate. Copies of: photos (official or personal); orders (promotion, decoration, travel, etc.); Mission Reports; Missing Air Crew Reports; personal diaries, logs, journals, etc; other documentation; or information that will help identify hi-lited individuals will be greatly appreciated, as one of my goals is to correctly identify every man and plane assigned to the 310th Bomb Group.

My only interest in this project is to honor those who served by perpetuating their story, and making it available for future generations, particularly the families and friends of our Great Heroes. If you are interested in helping, or if I may be of assistance in finding information about your 310th BG Hero, please contact me at: Lil-Butch@nc.rr.com 380th BS War Diary: The New Year began with a cold wind from the north. Many of the boys stayed in bed well into the day sleeping off last night's celebration. Everyone is wondering when operations will begin, and what 1944 will bring.

381st BS War Diary: New Year's day the area was pounded by an almost steady torrent of rain, and a constant gale of wind. Naturally, the lighting system failed. During the night, several tents in the area blew down, Captain Abbott's among them. Having retired early, Lt. Horrocks was the only person in the tent, and was sound asleep. He describes the incident as follows: "I noticed my feet getting cold, but didn't pay any attention to it. Pretty soon they began to get wet, so I decided that something had to be done." There were no lights, and the Lt. didn't have a flashlight. He groped around, found his clothes, and just as he was walking out of the tent, the whole thing collapsed. Two seconds later, the sky let loose with a torrent of rain, and thoroughly soaked the whole mess. Lt. Horrocks and tent mates haven't a dry be or stitch of clothing among them. He spent the rest of the night in the Officers' Club.

428th BS War Diary: The weather at Mezzovia is fine. Midday found us in shirt sleeves. The outfit devoted the day to catching up on a little belated writing.

Training Program: Lecture on Communications by Capt. Knight.

Knight, Thomas R., Capt, Signals Officer

428th BS War Diary: Some of the men took stock of our position on the island and started to dig slit trenches. The squadron area had completed a trench system already. Just an added precaution. Setting up of the offices has already begun, or had, before we arrived. Things are still very disorganized, however, and the S-2 equipment is mostly unpacked.

380th BS War Diary: The S-2 personnel started digging a slit-trench this morning. Several of the other boys took up the idea and started digging, too. Anything is liable to happen on this island. It always pays to be prepared.

381st BS War Diary: Major Cometh and 1st Lt. Joseph M. Baisch III, returned from Gambut. During their stay they managed to get in a trip which included Cairo and the Holy Land.

There was a 381st dance in Philippeville tonight. A bright moon and clear sky made it seem almost like a Saturday night at home. Music was supplied by the Group's recording apparatus and Special Service's supply of recordings. T/Sgt. Jorge Garcia, the Squadron's outstanding jitter-bug, didn't miss a dance, or a Mademoiselle. Sandwiches prepared by S/Sgt. Myron Munson, were served with punch. Transportation to and from was supplied by G.I. trucks.

S/Sgt. Wayne D. King returned from the hospital.

Pvt. Milton M. Carpenter was assigned to the Squadron and six officers and six enlisted men were attached for rations and quarters.

381st BS War Diary: No one, including J.D. Thompson, has been able to dig up a half way decent rumor since we arrived here. That is, not until the last few days, as moving rumors have just broken out again. The most obvious move---provided we are to make one, would be to Corsica. However, there are some pretty astute rumor experts who favor India as a possible scene for future Squadron operations. England is the runner-up, although rumors regarding England are usually 90% wishful thinking. Lt. Horrocks, Group Rumor Officer, has declined to make any statements pending further observations.

2nd Lt. James W. Burris left for Headquarters of the XII Air Force, where he will appear before a Medical Disposition Board, which will determine if the injuries which he received in the crash of Lt. Donovan's aircraft, will prevent him from flying in combat again.

428th BS War Diary: The 428th flew her first mission today. It was a six plane sweep of the South coast of France. Cloud cover prevented an attack against a 3,000 ton M/V. No opposition was sighted.

428th BS Mission Summary: (Ops Order ---/mission ---) Group Mission # : (428th BS mission # 150) January 13th marked our first operation in two and one-half months. Six aircraft went out on a sea sweep covering the West coast of France and the Italian Riviera. A 3000 ton M/V was sighted, but a low ceiling prevented an attack, so the beginning was quiet and uneventful. It was our squadron's 150th mission. Spitfires of the 52nd Fighter Group served as escort.

Mission Report # 145

Date- Jan. 14, 1944

Target- Sea Search

Squadron airplanes- Six

After two months of inactivity our squadron opened its combat operational period again by taking off from our new base at Ghisonaccia in an effort to bomb enemy shipping along the French Coast near Agay. A 3,000 ton tanker and a smaller vessel as escort heading NE at 1532 hours were attacked. Due to the 7/10 cumulus development in the target area, the results were not observed by our crews as the break in the clouds, through which they bombed, closed up.

However, one of the Spitfire escorts dove below the clouds and reported that the tanker was on fire after the bombs had been dropped.

There was a moderate amount of inaccurate light flak along with some slight inaccurate heavy flak encountered from the target vessels.

All ships returned safely home at 1700 hours,

Photos were taken.

381st BS War Diary: Most of the tents in the area are using fuel oil, instead of wood, as it is easier to obtain. As seen from the top of the hill, the tents look like so many tea kettles on a large stove, each with its plume of smoke. Despite the advantages of burning oil, it has one serious draw-back. Soot is everywhere. Someone remarked that the area is beginning to look like Pittsburgh, which is true enough.

Training Program: Two Meteorology lectures by Major Cole, Group Weather Officer. Eight training flights.

The only enemy action observed was slight, inaccurate flak from the Southeast coast of Elba.

Date- Jan. 17, 1944

Target- Radar Station, Porquerolles Island

Squadron airplanes- Five

Five of our Mitchell B-25 bombers took off at 1340 hours today on a sea rover in search of enemy shipping along the southern French coast. The sea was clear of craft so the alternate target, Radar Station on Porquerolles Isle was bombed.

Crews reported that the bombing pattern fell short and the target was still visible as the flight turned for home.

There was no flak nor enemy aircraft encountered in target area.

All five of our bombers landed safely at 1630 hours.

Photos were taken.

Eighty-two of the officers and eighty-nine of the enlisted men who have been attached to the Squadron for rations and quarters have finally been assigned to other Squadrons of the Group and are moving to their new areas. Date- Jan. 18, 1944

Target- M/V 2,000 tons at 43°24'N; 10°15'E.

Squadron airplanes- Six

A sight was made by the British Reconnaissance Marauder in the late morning at 1235 hours. Six of our Mitchells took off to bomb the 2,000 ton M/V observed at 43°24'N; 10°15'E.

A perfect exhibition of bombing was turned in by our bombardiers as four strings of bombs were seen to quarter the vessel amidships. Last seen it was listing and definitely sinking.

Slight inaccurate heavy and light flak was experienced from two vessels just south of target vessel. Some slight inaccurate heavy flak was also reported coming from shore batteries at approximately 43°23'N; 10°27'E.

There were about twenty coasters and small craft also in target area between Castiglioncello and Cecina Marina. Target time was 1330 hours.

All six of our bombers landed at 1400 hours.

Squadron airplanes- Six

Just ninety minutes after returning from the first shipping strike off Castiglioncello, our bombers again took off and returned to that same spot to knock out the remaining craft.

Three small craft, stationary and close together, were chosen as the target and attacked. Time 1620 hours. Our bombs fell to left, short, and over boats, but were close enough to capsize one of the boats, which appeared to be a landing craft. One of two remaining boats, a coaster, sustained damage from near misses.

No flak. No enemy fighters observed or encountered. Small groups of motor boats and torpedo boats were observed in the vicinity of the target.

At 1700 hours our bombers landed safely at the home base.

Photos were taken.

428th BS War Diary: Both squadrons participated in highly successful raids. At Imperia, at Castiglioncello boats were sunk. Colonel Hunter, who arrived today, had reason to be pleased. Briefing room and S-2 offices are pretty well set up now, and the arrangement promises to be excellent. Squadron facilities are also some of the best we have had. Percy Campbell, Sergeant Welder, has made a mess-kit washing device which beats everything this outfit has ever seen. It is a copy of one Major Epperson saw at Oudna. A large Italian tent serves as a mess hall, and the orderly room is situated in a room in what used to be the police station.

The target this time appeared to go Scot-free. The formation safely weathered slight inaccurate heavy and intense, inaccurate light flak from the target and a single small escort vessel..

428th BS Mission Summary: (Ops Order ---/mission ---) Group Mission # : (428th BS mission # 154) The next morning the sighting of a 10,000 ton M/V sent six of our B-25's scooting toward the French coast. On the bomb runs, at least four FW-190's, the first we had seen, attacked the first element. Captain Bitter and two members of his crew were wounded. S/Sgt John Sviantek, his gunner, suffered injuries that will probably cost him one eye. T/Sgt. Amirault, aerial photographer, suffered a scalp wound and bits of shell fragments imbedded in one of his legs. Captain Bitter had a sliver of steel run through his hand and another fragment inflicted a flesh wound in his back. S/Sgt Lungner, Radio Operator, received a hip wound. The aircraft was riddled, a total loss. The successful crash landing at the base by 2nd Lt. "Hub" Arnoult, the co-pilot, is a testimonial of his exceptional ability.

1st Lt. Thornton Fleming's aircraft was also badly battered. S/Sgt Donaldson, his tail gunner, received a serious leg injury from a 20mm cannon burst. The vessel was missed, but some consolation might be derived from the destruction of the FW-190 that did the bulk of the damage by the guns of the tail gunner, S/Sgt Alexander Pudlo. Another probable was chalked up. The escort put away another FW of a separate flight of four. Moderate, heavy, inaccurate and accurate, plus intense light flak afforded further opposition in the target area. This fire came from the target, five escort vessels, and the surrounding islands.

Target- Sea Search

Squadron airplanes- Six

A ten-thousand ton tanker was sighted by the British recce Marauder during the morning. At 1200 hours six of our B-25's took off to search for it along the French Coast east of Nice.

A 9/10 cumulus development at 2000 ft. along the coast prevented our bombers from attacking the alternate target, rail line at Bordighero, after the search for the taker was in vain. All bombs were returned and our ships landed safely at 1430 hours.

381st BS War Diary: This morning twelve planes with their full combat crews left for Corsica to commence operations. They were accompanied by sufficient ground personnel to keep the planes in the air. The total on D.S.: Twenty-eight officers and sixty-nine enlisted men. Although there had been some rumors that this might take place, the announcement came as a complete surprise to everyone. All personnel leaving brought their baggage to a point near the Orderly Room, where it was loaded into trucks and taken to the line. This was accomplished in a haze of very welcome excitement. Perhaps the rest of us will be moving up soon. Everyone hopes so, as a four month's vacation from combat is becoming monotonous.

News was received today of an Allied landing some 30 miles South of Rome. No details were available.

S/Sgt. Paul (NMI) Dees left for Algiers this morning en route to the U.S.A. In the same plane with him were Sgt. Jim Rockett and Cpl. Nels Johnson, who will spend a three day pass in Algiers.

The following named men were assigned to the Squadron today: Sgt. K.L. Myers, Cpl. L. E. Sublett, and Pfc. A.S. Sichelski.

Eight S/Sgts. Were promoted to T/Sgt.

Steak for dinner tonight. There was so much on hand that one of the cooks was sent into the mess hall to announce that meat was going to waste. Of course, there was a mad rush immediately, and it was all gone in a matter of minutes. For dessert there was cake with real frosting on it. It was made in town by a regular baker.

Another dance was given in town by the 381st tonight. Printed invitations had been distributed to all likely Mademoiselles in town, who showed up in great numbers dressed in their Sunday best. Music was supplied by a 7 piece French civilian orchestra. Sandwiches and punch were served throughout the evening. Major Cometh advised "Thumbtacking" the punch instead of spiking it. It is said that whoever thumbtacked it was very accomplished at that art, as the liquid refreshments were a howling success. The Prisoners were among the guests. All dressed up in their O.D. clothes, they were indistinguishable from regular G.I.'s. They had a very festive evening, and were not at all bashful about cutting in on the Americans if they spotted a Mademoiselle to their liking.

Training Program: Two aircraft identification lectures by Lt. Harris.

In Italy, maximum support is given to Allied landings at Anzio, which are begun by the US Fifth Army's VI Corps at 0200; fighter-bombers, light and medium bombers direct efforts toward isolating the landing area by cutting roads, bridges, and railroads and obstructing towns in the surrounding region, at Valettri, Valmontone, Collesferro, Ceprano, and Fondi and hitting traffic and communications throughout the area; fighters maintain a patrol over shipping and beachhead and successfully intercept several enemy fighter-bomber missions directed against the landings.

Mission Report # 151 Date- Jan. 22, 1944
Target- Porto Ferrario Harbor, Elba. Shipping Squadron airplanes- Six

In the grey of the morning just before sunrise, our crews were briefed to hit shipping in the harbor of Porto Ferrario, Elba. This concentration of shipping, mainly E boats, were a dangerous threat to our newly acquired bridgehead just south of Anzio. It was a "must" target. Twelve B-25 Mitchells, six from the 380th Bomb. Sqdn. took off at 0730 hrs. and after an uneasy half hour attempting to gain altitude through the overcast, Lt. Col Wilder, our C.O. skillfully led the formation over the target at 0917 hrs.

Deadly accuracy of our bombardiers in high altitude precision bombing was exemplified as the harbor was turned into a tangled, seething mass of flame and destruction. Ten to fifteen of the twenty boats in the port were destroyed. Others probably sustained damage. Dock installations were destroyed. Several fires and explosions were reported by the crews. Considerable smoke covered the entire harbor.

Moderate inaccurate heavy and light flak was experienced in the target area. None of our ships were hit. No enemy aircraft observed or encountered.

Three medium M/V's observed off Point Ala Sparviero, stationary or heading south at 0915 hours.

All our bombers returned at 1000 hrs.

Photos were taken.

381st BS War Diary: Major Cometh left for Corsica at noon today. In his plane were Capts. Abbott and Abplanalp; 1st Lt. Mason, S/Sgts. Morningstar and Pummill; and Sgt. J.D. Thompson. They had taken off in the flight of planes that left yesterday, but were unable to retract the landing gear, and had to return. Rumor has it that S/Sgt. Morningstar fixed the landing gear by placing his barracks bag in the nacelle. Seems that the Sgt. had a really super date for the dance last night.

Today's news did not include information on the landing near Rome other than that it is progressing.

Pfc. George W. Tolley is absent sick at the 57th Station Hospital.

The projector is in commission again, so there was a show tonight: "Jane Eyre", with Joan Fontaine and Orson Wells.

428th BS War Diary: The boys hit the "E" boat concentration at Porto Ferrario, helping to neutralize any threat to the impending landing at Nettuno. The bar is full almost every night. The novelty will probably wear off, but it is doing a land-office business, and it is necessary to go out and get more Eau De Vie every few days. Some of the boys think the stuff should be called "Eau De Mort", or else reserved for fuel for diesel engines -- it burns beautifully.

428th BS Mission Summary: (Ops Order ---/mission ---) Group Mission # : (428th BS mission # 155) The morning of the 22nd brought news of the impending landing at Nettuno. The 310th mission on this day was to strike at the collection of "E" boats at Elba in Port Ferrario. This was a 12 plane effort combining the forces of both the 380th and 428th. From eight to twelve of the twenty to thirty "E" boats in the harbor were definitely destroyed and the unserviceability of many of the others was probable. Dock installations were hit, igniting several fires. Moderate inaccurate heavy and light flak dotted the sky in the target area but to no avail. The turn away left a pall of smoke in the harbor area. Another job well done.

Date- Jan. 23, 1944

Target- Sea Search

Squadron airplanes- Five

No luck today. A twelve-ship formation, six bombers of the 380th, took off at 1355 hrs on a sea rover. The Italian coast was searched; Elba was given the once over, but no shipping was sighted. All bombs were brought back.

Fairly accurate slight heavy flak was encountered from southern coast of Elba. No E/A observed or encountered. A radar station on a high hilltop on Elba Isle at 42°46'N 10°07'E was sighted.

All our aircraft landed safely at 1635 hrs.

No photos were taken.

381st BS War Diary: The landing near Rome, according to the BBC News Broadcast, has resulted in the establishment of a beach head. Patrols are reported to be plunging into enemy held territory with little or no opposition from the Germans. Nine German divisions totaling about 100,000 men will be trapped if the Allies can succeed in cutting their lines of communication---the three main roads leading southeast from Rome.

1st Lt. Frank P. Wells known to all as "Pop" and liked and kidded by everyone, and twelve enlisted men left by transport for Corsica.

Rations were distributed for the first time in two weeks. Double quantities of everything were obtainable. It is said that we will not get them again for another two weeks. The fourteen packages of cigarettes and two boxes of matches distributed this time forecast a shortage in the very near future.

It is being said that a German propaganda broadcast announced that reprisals will be made against B-25 units stationed in Corsica, because of their successes against enemy shipping and radar stations. It's nice to know that we are getting in their hair to an extent that we merit so much publicity!

Training Program: Training films.

428th BS War Diary: French-based German bombers, bridgehead bound, caused an alert tonight. 52nd Spits and our night fighters had a field day. A raid alert sent us trechward in time to watch an enemy bomber explode as it crashed against a mountain perhaps 20 miles to the North. It lit up the sky like some gigantic flare. 428th BS War Diary: The word has come to pack up--already. Pack we did, but not without considerable cussing. The fear was that we would go to India, and it later turned out to be justified. All the telephone wires and light wires are coming down, and field office equipment packed. Some of the more cautious refuse to become excited, knowing our tendency to dry runs.

The morning of the 25th orders were received to pack lock, stock and barrel and to be prepared to leave for Africa the next day. The logic of the situation seemed to indicate a move to the far East. Spirits were low and with considerable reason. As we were just about packed the order was remanded and we were just as unhappy. However, the order did not arrive before the newly-arrived complement of B-25-G's of the 381st squadron had left for Africa.

Squadron airplanes- Six

Apparently "Jerry" is not quite cautious and prefers to move his supplies mainly by land route. Six of our Mitchells took off today on a sea rover along the French coast from Imperia to Toulon to attack any enemy shipping sighted. The entire coast was clear of any craft. Our bombers returned with their bombs at 1055 hrs.

No flak. No enemy aircraft observed or encountered.

Two towers, appearing to be Radar Station towers, were observed on the N end of Levant Isle. Approx coordinates: 43°02'N; 06°28'E.

All ships home safely at 1055 hrs.

No photos were taken.

Target- Shipping in Porto S. Stefano Harbor, Italy

Squadron airplanes- Six

After a quick but thorough briefing twelve of our Mitchells, six from the 380th, took off at 1415 hrs. to bomb shipping in Porto S. Stefano Harbor, Italy. The target was attacked at 1515 hrs. The central part of the harbor received the major amount of the damage inflicted. One string of bombs walked across the base of the quay and near misses were reported on a 300 ft. M/V anchored alongside of it.

No flak. No enemy aircraft.

All our ships landed safely at 1615 hrs.

Photos were taken.

That three were definitely sunk and a fourth badly damaged and probably did sink seems impossible. However, photograph evidence proves that just that was accomplished by 6 B-25's flying at from 8000 to 9600 ft on a moving convoy. Intense light flak from the targets was low.

“Flight “A” gets mission. B-26 goes down over field. 6 bail out.”

428th BS War Diary: Today we saw a B-26 crew bail out and have their plane crash in the hills to the west. Ghisonaccia has become an extremely important emergency landing base. B-26's in distress stop here often after raids on Italy. B-17's stop to refuel after flying to France. A-36's use it as an auxiliary advance base. It's a little Mitchell field.

USAAF Chronology: MTO Tactical Operations (12th AF):

In Italy, B-25's hit road junctions at Valmontone and Genzano di Roma, and bomb the town of Monte Compatri; weather cancels all B-26 operations and several B-25 missions. A-20's hit the town of and road junction near Cori, and XII Air Support Command fighter-bombers hit Sora; US and RAF fighters hit barges and fishing boats off Zara and Trojica, Yugoslavia; fighters on patrol over Anzio meet no air opposition. 415th Night Fighter Squadron, 64th Fighter Wing, transfers from Montecorvino to Marcianise, Italy with Beaufighters. The detachment operating from Gaudo Airfield also transfers.

380th BS War Diary: PX rations were issued this afternoon for the first time in several weeks. Have to pay for them now. Our location is no longer considered in the combat zone. Had a small mail call. Another night of excitement. This time the gasoline dump went up in flames. It was a blazing inferno for hours. The whole town was lighted by the sky leaping flames.

381st BS War Diary: Lt. Baisch is running a shuttle service between Algeria and Corsica, flying the more important personnel and equipment to the new base. He has made two trips during the past two days, moving beaucoup impedimenta. This morning he took off in 454 (32-32454 "Boomerang") as usual, a B-25 stripped of its armor and guns with the first priority of Intelligence and Operations personnel and equipment. Loaded to the gills, 454 waddled down the runway, gained speed and took to the air. After circling Philippeville and the field, Lt. Baisch pointed 565's nose toward that portion of the wild blue yonder occupied by the skies of Sardinia. At an altitude of 1,500 feet and speed of 190 miles per hour, Lt. Baisch brought 454 within sight of Sardinia's rocky coast in practically no time at all. He continued northward, following Sardinia's western shore all the way to Porto Torres, which the Group bombed on 18 April 1943, and then cut through the straits of Bonifacio and up Corsica's Eastern coast until he reached Ghisonaccia.

Nestled in a circular area between the sea and a rim of jagged snow capped hills, Ghisonaccia is a pleasant little village, whose crumbling stone and stucco buildings will house a goodly portion of the 310th Group during its stay in Corsica.

Although another "G" mission was flown by the Squadron today, the day's feature, by way of excitement, was the burning of the gasoline dump.

Shortly after dark, while people were still wondering what was causing the ruddy glow in the sky south of Ghisonaccia, the public address system's mush mouthed voice announced that the gas dump was on fire and cracked out an order for all personnel to help roll drums of 100 octane gasoline away from the flames. The fire had been started by a gasoline truck which had stopped to load in the center of a cleared area surrounded by neatly stacked drums. A hundred or more gas drums and two trucks were enveloped in the conflagration by the time the crowds arrived. Drums were bursting, and sending gallons of liquid flames spraying through the air. There was apprehension lest the drums arranged around the periphery of the dump which were getting hot would explode, but crews of officers and G.I.'s hustled in, and shortly had them rolled out of range of the flames. Gradually the fire spent its force. By 2200 hours it had died completely.

379th BS War Diary: Additional Information for January 1944: A small detachment of our squadron remained behind at the Philippeville Air Base, while the rest of our men were hard at work pulling missions against the enemy in the Middle East. The only actual work done at Philippeville was guard duty, and a few details for Group Headquarters.

Social activities consisted of two dances during the month, at which there were many pretty French girls from the town in attendance, and a French orchestra supplied the music with their own special version of American swing.

The weather was quite cold, but the men managed to remain cozy with warm fires in self-made stoves in the tents, burning fuel oil whenever available.

We received the usual line of BX rations, consisting of tobacco and candy and an added treat of peanuts and chocolate sent to us by our outfit in Gambut, Libya. Mail was plentiful with the expected uplift in morale.

The men were looking forward to rejoining our main unit and resuming work with our buddies. The meals were unusually good, with plenty of fresh meat obtainable, and our mess sergeant kept the boys contented with pork chops, steaks, and good old American hamburgers.

380th BS War Diary: Additional Information for January 1944:

5 February 1944

G H I S O N A C C I A

After two long months of inactivity, we heartily welcomed the combat crews on their arrival at Ghisonaccia Landing Ground. The sight of that formation of Mitchells brought joy to all our hearts. It wasn't long before our squadron started operations, for on the seventeenth of the month we started "the ball rolling" by taking off on a rover search along the north-western coast of Italy. We followed that mission up with numerous others hitting at shipping, radar stations, and harbors. We had good hunting, too, and as the end of the month loomed into view a noteworthy record was established.

Half of our ground echelon arrived at Ajaccio on lighters the early part of the month and then moved by truck convoy across the island to Ghisonaccia, reaching their destination the Fourth of January. Among the personnel to arrive were Capt. Seeton, Commanding, and Lieuts. Summerfield and Drew.

Drew, Edward A., 1Lt, pilot

Seeton, Ross V., Jr., Capt, Armament Officer

Summerfield, John (NMI), Capt, intelligence

Before the month was over, at least twenty-five of our combat crew members finished fifty missions, completing their tour of combat duty.

The "G" crews, our newly assigned set of combat members are still training back at Phillipville at present, but it won't be long ere they, too, will join in the scrap.

THE ITALIAN CAMPAIGN (CONT'D) 1944 NOV

After a rather quiet New Year's here in Corsica, We had a very hectic month during the remainder of January. As the New Year opened, the small ground force acting as advance echelon here was sitting quietly through the cool rainy weather, and could not imagine the beginning of operations from this base for a month or more. We were soon to be fooled, for on January 10, our planes arrived from Africa, and the activity grew as plans for immediate operations were given out. More of the ground personnel having arrived with most of our equipment on January 4, we were set up and ready for operations when our first mission came through on January 13.

Our first mission as a group from Corsica on January 13 was merely a sea search by the 428th Sqd., since we were anxious for action and no strike had come through, and we wanted to do a little hunting on our own. No good target was sighted, but we were not to be discouraged so easily. The following day (Jan. 14) our squadron went on the alert. We had better luck that day, having a strike off the southern coast of France. The luck didn't hold, however, for we had to bomb through a break in the overcast, and the exact results were never known.

With the first missions over, others came thick and fast, with the targets being shipping off the southern coast of France and along the coast of Italy, as well as radar stations on Giglio Island and Porquerolles Island. The first credit for definite sinkings of enemy boats came to both the 380th and 428th Squadrons on the same day, January 18, with each sinking a medium-size merchant vessel.

Mission followed mission, with our planes even going into the harbor at Piombino, Porto Ferrajo, and Porto San Stefano after shipping, and even dock installations. The raid on Porto Ferrajo, Elba, which was led by our squadron, was especially noted for the excellent bombing pattern, the number of small landing craft destroyed on the mission, and for the work of our crews put in in circling the target for over half an hour in order to find a good break in the clouds for a good bomb run.

A squadron of B-25-G's (381st Sqdn.) arrived on January 23 to help us in our work, and immediately took over the attacks on the lighter targets. On January 25, we received orders to pack for moving, and it was twenty-four hours later, on January 26, after most equipment was packed, that the orders were cancelled, and we continued operations.

As the month came to a close, operations was continuing as normal, and the number of men completing their fifty missions was growing rapidly.

381st BS War Diary: Additional Information for January 1944:

SPECIAL OUTLINE SECTION --- JANUARY 1944

Throughout most of January, the Squadron continued its activities at Philippeville in a routine essentially indistinguishable from that following during November and December. Excess combat personnel having been trained, were transferred, and the remaining men flew daily training flights and attended seemingly endless lectures on aircraft recognition and on the operation of aircraft under combat conditions. Ground personnel relaxed and enjoyed the comparative inactivity associated with not being in operation. For all personnel, it meant the Kuku Nut Gruve and the Battle of Philippeville. The Kuku Nut Gruve continued its function of providing nightly entertainment, good fellowship and relaxation for which it is now justly famous. The Battle of Philippeville is a term which refers to encounters between members of the Squadron and French civilians. Having been in the vicinity long enough to have made many pleasant civilian contacts, the Squadron and Group returned their generous hospitality with dances given in town. One thing led to another, until the lively interchange of social intercourse assumed the proportions of a battle.

But all of this suddenly came to an end, for on 21 January 1944, Major Cometh led twelve of our new B-25-G's in a flight which landed at Ghisonaccia Station, Corsica, where the 380th and 428th Squadrons had been operating since 13 January 1944. These planes went into combat immediately, and by the end of the month had flown a total of six "G" missions, striking at Axis shipping over an arc extending along the Italian coast from Leghorn to Civitavecchia. Despite the joys of the Kuku Nut Gruve and the excitement attending the multitudinous encounters of the Battle of Philippeville, the resumption of combat operations came as a great relief to the entire organization. There is an overtone of excitement which pervades all departments when our aircraft go into battle regularly, for it gives each man a feeling of accomplishment --- a sense of being an intimate part of the force which will bring the war to a victorious conclusion.

During the latter part of the month, priority personnel were flown up in ship number 454 (42-32454 "Boomerang"), which is stripped of its turrets and used as a transport by the Squadron. This plane made as many as two trips daily. By the end of January, fully half of the Squadron's personnel were in Corsica. The rest will come later.

Ghisonaccia Station is situated half way up the east coast of Corsica, standing between the sea and a range of jagged hills which are now glistening with snow. "X" shaped, the tiny village is huddled about the intersection of a highway and a railroad which is three miles east of the town of Ghisonaccia. The majority of its buildings are thick walled stone dwellings, constructed along the lines of French provincial architecture. It exudes an atmosphere comparable to that which Hollywood into motion pictures depicting French villages of 1918.

Formerly having been totally occupied by the British, most of these buildings were empty when the Squadrons arrived, and were immediately requisitioned for the use of the Group. Group Headquarters is situated in the former railroad station, while the 381st Squadron's departmental offices and Officer personnel are housed in a group of buildings formerly belonging to the Hotel de la Gare. Intelligence and Operations Offices are located in a wooden barrack built by the British. The field, situated less than a mile from the village, is shared by the Group with Squadrons of French Spitfires and American P-39's whose personnel occupy some of the village's buildings. It is a very comfortable set-up for winter, as well as being ideally situated for daily interference with Axis shipping, for the field is only 58 miles from the enemy held island of Elba, and 83 miles from the shores of Italy.

Note: Although the following account is contained in the January 1944 War Diary, a copy has also been inserted into the 23 Feb 43 section of the history.

On 23 February 1943, a Sea Sweep was flown from Berteaux, Algeria by six B-25-C's. Three of these aircraft failed to return.* One of the missing aircraft, piloted by Capt. Leonard A. Eddy, carried the Squadron Commander, Major Ivan L. Ferguson as co-pilot, while Capt. Eddy's regular co-pilot, 1st Lt. Frank B. Hawkins, flew as observer. 1st Lt. Nicholas D. Katzenbach flew as navigator. Capt. Perry D. Pickett was bombardier and S/Sgt. Henry L. Schave and Sgt. Milo K. Taylor were turret-gunner and radio operator. In April they were all reported prisoners of war of the Italian Government except Major Ferguson and Sgt. Taylor. On 5 November 1943, Major Ferguson was reported to be in Germany. To date, no official word has been received regarding Sgt. Taylor, although he is believed to be in a German prison.

Eddy, Leonard A., Capt, pilot

Ferguson, Ivan Leonard, Maj, pilot, Commander

Hawkins, Frank B. "Pancho", 1Lt, pilot

Katzenbach, Nicholas D. "Katz", 1Lt, navigator

Pickett, Perry D., Capt, bombardier, navigator

Schave, Henry Lloyd, S/Sgt, turret-gunner

Taylor, Milo K., S/Sgt, radio-gunner

On 31 December 1943, Lt. Hawkins, having escaped from Italy, visited the Squadron at Philippeville, Algeria while en route to the United States. The following account of Lt. Hawkins's adventures as a prisoner of war was reconstructed from notes made when Lt. Hawkins told his story to members of the Squadron. It is in many respects incomplete, for Lt. Hawkins was reluctant to reveal many important details, lest this information accidentally fall into the hands of the enemy, and destroy the chances of other soldiers who have escaped and are waiting to get through the battle line into Allied held territory.

* Complete details of this mission can be found in the Squadron History's Mission Report # 33, 23 February 1943.

Capt. Eddy landed his B-25 smoothly on the water at 150 miles per hour after one engine had been set afire by flak. Everyone climbed out quickly and safely with the exception of Capt. Eddy, who ripped a gash in the flesh of his groin about five inches long and one and a half inches deep while being pushed through the pilot's escape hatch by Capt. Pickett. The upper turret plexiglass was broken in order to rescue Schave and Taylor from the radio compartment, and both life rafts were broken out and inflated. All of this took place within a space of seven minutes, after which the plane sank slowly --- settling into the water without a ripple and leaving only a strange quietness.

Everyone had gotten thoroughly wet getting into the life rafts. Once settled, they made Capt. Eddy as comfortable as possible and then tied both rafts together with the lashing rope found among the supplies packed in the rafts. Lt. Katzenbach, the navigator, with the aid of his compass and what maps he had salvaged, calculated that their best and only chance would be to head in a westerly direction, and try to reach Africa west of Cape Serrat where the Allied battle line met the coast. They found that the wind and the current were taking them west --- the direction in which they wanted to go. When necessary, they rowed. This was some help, but with only one set of oars, their progress was not rapid.

It had been about 1525 hours when they had gone down, and since there was not enough sun left to dry their clothes, they spent a miserable night. Next morning they dried out and were considerably more comfortable, although Capt. Eddy's wound was still painful in spite of first aid. Lt. Hawkins made a sail for one of the rafts out of his pajamas which he was wearing under his flying equipment. This resulted in a considerable increase in speed.

At 1630 on the second day, when they figured that they had traveled a distance of about fifty-seven miles, they heard the drone of plane motors. Looking up, they saw three sea planes, which they identified as Italian Cants which at that time were doing patrol work between Sicily and Bizerte, similar to our Air Sea Rescue Service. After several minutes two of these planes landed in the water nearby, while the third remained aloft as cover. Upon being picked up, the officers and men were divided between the two planes, three in one, four in the other. These arrangements were made by sign language, as none of the seven men understood Italian. The motors in both of these sea planes were of the temperamental variety, causing the crews great difficulty in starting them again. After some two hours of frenzied gestures and excited conversation, they managed to get the engines operating to a point where they were able to taxi the ships. They made the journey all the way to Cagliari on the surface of the water.

Capt. Eddy was sent to the hospital as soon as they landed, while the other six were handed over to interrogation authorities who questioned them immediately. This interrogation lasted for an hour, and next day they were questioned again for a similar period. They were treated with courtesy during these sessions; there was no violence. Among the multitude of questions were many seemingly foolish ones, interspersed with questions which were intended to cross them up. To most of them they answered simply that they did not know, or that they didn't remember. As a result of this lack of "cooperation", there were some threats, but none of them were carried out. The interrogators seemed to be intrigued with the idea that some of these Americans had volunteered for Army service, and expressed a complete and genuine inability to understand their motives. The food given them was quite good for the first four days, but after Cagliari was bombed by Allied aircraft, the Italians saved the better food for themselves, as the bombing seemed to have crippled their supply facilities.

During the next weeks they made several moves. First they were transported by rail to the north east tip of Sardinia, thence, after a few days to Italy by boat, landing at Lido di Roma. They were then loaded into lorries and driven to Poggio Mirteto, a small town about twenty miles north of Rome, where they were given comfortable quarters in an ancient monastery. Here they spent seventeen days, ostensibly in medical "Quarantine". Their stay at this place was relatively pleasant and they enjoyed a good rest. The food was of excellent quality, well prepared and plentiful. But actually, this place was just another interrogation center, alive with microphones and thronged with stooges. Major Ferguson was quartered with a high ranking RAF officer. Taking each other for stooges, their conversation consisted of little save "good morning" and "good night". On their last day at Poggio Mirteto each discovered that the other was genuine.

From here they were moved by rail, to Chieti, near Pescara. The officers and enlisted men were separated at this point and put into nearby camps. Processing, and "Sugar and honey" treatment were over, and they were now about to settle down to the regular prison camp routine. At Chieti, they found about forty American officers and a thousand British officers, mostly from the RAF.

Conditions at this new camp were anything but good. The previous hospitality had been in line with the Axis policy whereby they attempt to make a prisoner relax and feel at home --- and then catch him off guard with stooges --- or spy on his conversation with microphones for the purpose of securing military information. Water at Chieti was their greatest need, there being little enough to drink, let alone wash. Although there were good plumbing facilities --- beautiful showers, etc., they would often be forced to go for several weeks without even washing their hands. Although they were never actually mistreated, the Italians showed them the minimum of decency required by International Law. This is true most particularly in the matter of food. At its best, the diet furnished by the Italian Government to its own men is insufficient and unbalanced. Theoretically, while under supervision of the Italians, Allied prisoners were supposed to receive rations identical to those of the Italian soldier. Actually, the 200 gram loaf of round black bread supplied daily to Italian troops was reduced in the case of the prisoners, to 50 to 75 grams each per day. Together with bread, the staple item of diet was macaroni or spaghetti --- enough to grow monotonous, but not enough to relieve hunger. Once a week, for variety, there was rationed a minute portion of lemon powder, and two small glasses of wine. The few enlisted men who had the strength to volunteer for work were rewarded with an extra portion of bread.

Lt. Hawkins shares with all Allied Prisoners of War the conviction that "The International Red Cross is the greatest organization which has ever been on the face of this earth". With the eleven pound box of food which they supply to each man weekly, when conditions allow, they have managed to keep countless men alive who otherwise might have died from starvation. Supplementing the meager Italian G.I. diet, the Red Cross boxes got them safely through. These boxes contained practically everything necessary for a balanced diet: powdered milk; biscuits and cookies; chocolate; salt and pepper; corned beef or spam; dried fruits; sugar and forty cigarettes. With the assistance of friendly guards, the cigarettes and chocolate were sometimes traded on the civilian black market for fresh meat and other necessities. These packages are packed and donated by the Red Cross of many countries. The American Red Cross, according to Lt. Hawkins packs the best box. The Red Cross served another important function for the prisoners, for through their cooperation, each man was allowed to send two V-Mail type letters and one post card each week. In addition, they were allowed to receive any mail or packages sent to them. However, getting mail takes time. The first letters usually arrive in about five months, while packages from home are usually enroute for ten months to a year. Lt. Hawkins was fortunate in this matter. He received his first letters in less than three months.

The Italians in charge of the camp constantly tried to promote bad feeling between the British and Americans. These activities appeared to be chiefly for propaganda reasons, possibly for the purpose of obtaining counter-propaganda to be used in retaliation to the publicity given the fact that German and Italian prisoners had to be segregated after the Tunisian campaign. They attempted to bring about this bad feeling in very small and petty ways. For instance: by giving bed sheets to the Americans and not the English, and by denying privileges to one group which they gave to others. Both the British and Americans realized this and winked at their shallow and obvious efforts.

While at Chieti, Lt. Hawkins served on the American Officers' Escape Committee. This committee was surreptitiously organized for the purpose of devising ways and means of escape. They made plans which resulted in several successful escapes, but more often their best laid plans proved to be too risky, and were abandoned. As the camp was very well guarded, they found themselves under almost constant observation. Then too, there were the ever-present stooges. Finally the committee decided to dig a tunnel under the wall which surrounded the camp. After a careful search for a suitably secluded spot, they selected an ideal location in the boiler room of the cook house. It was close to the wall, and if an efficient watch were set up, they would be able to work unobserved. For a starting point they use a stone step inside the cook house. They carefully loosened the mortar holding the tread until they were able to lift it off like a box top, and were thus able to crawl underneath the building. Finally they started their tunnel, but after several days of digging found that the building's foundation extended far underground, and that they would have to chip a hole through three feet of concrete in order to continue their tunnel. This required about five weeks of steady work, as they had to progress with extreme caution. Unfortunately, there was a sentry post outside the building directly over the tunnel. It therefore became necessary to devise some means to prevent the guard from hearing the concrete being chipped. With characteristic Yankee ingenuity, they found someone to chop wood in the yard close to the sentry, and while working inside, they timed their strokes with the stroke of the man chopping wood. Finally, after expending much effort and not a little anxiety, they got through the concrete and started on the tunnel proper. They took the dirt in inconspicuous quantities, and spread it out of doors with studied carelessness. They managed to take out a tremendous quantity of Italian soil in this manner, and had completed nearly half of the tunnel by 7 September 43.

But on 7 September 43 their work was interrupted by the Allied-Italian armistice. There was terrific excitement in the camp, for they expected to be released immediately, as were the prisoners in most camps. In practically all cases, the Italian Commandant informed the prisoners of the armistice, and released them with his blessing. However, at Chieti, the senior American officer, realizing that large numbers of escapees would be easy prey for German patrols, forbade them to escape under pain of courts martial, and posted American guards to keep them in. They had continued under this set-up for a week when a German paratrooper unit arrived and took the camp over. The American officers were then moved to a camp which was under German control.

At the new camp, they were greeted by 2,000 Americans of all ranks who had been recaptured by the Jerry patrols after being released by the Italians. Under the Germans, the prison set-up differed principally in that the discipline and surveillance was far more strict, and the food better and more plentiful. The Germans, for example, gave them all the bread they could eat, and though strict, were in general more decent than the Italians had been. On one point, however, the Italians had been decidedly more humane; the German guards would shoot a prisoner dead if he approached the barrier or walls surrounding the camp, or if he was suspected of trying to escape. The Italians would put the first shot over the head of a perspective escapee, giving him an opportunity to change his mind.

Lt. Hawkins and his companions continued to study escape possibilities, but abandoned all their plans as too dangerous since failure meant death. However, the general situation of the Italian campaign at this time began to play into their hands, for the Germans were commencing to retreat before the Allied advances in Southern Italy, and in the camp, preparations were being made to transfer all prisoners to Germany; in fact some had already left. When an Austrian guard with the Germans helped two American Officers to slip out of the camp. Lt. Hawkins, with Lt. Gardiner of the 98th Bomb Group redoubled their efforts to hit upon a likely plan. As more and more of the prisoners departed for Germany, the guard was relaxed and their chances seemed to grow progressively better. The two lieutenants finally decided to hide out in the very shallow attic of their barracks until the camp was completely abandoned. Taking what few rations they had, and a pint of water, they crawled thru a trap door into the attic. Finding that the rafters were too far apart to crawl over, and that the ceiling was too low for them to jump from rafter to rafter, they went back for bed boards, and used these to crawl back into the most obscure corner of the attic. They were absent from twice daily roll call on 2 October 43. They could hear the camp being searched for them, and knew that a general alarm had probably been sounded. A German officer examined the attic (without a flashlight), but not being able to negotiate the space between the rafters, considered his job complete after firing a few wild shots into the dark. Although this scared them plenty at the time, it convinced them that their hiding place had not been discovered.

Their stay in the attic was most uncomfortable. They were unable to walk around, for their positions were cramped, and they had exhausted their small supply of food and water more quickly than they had anticipated. Lack of water produced greater discomfort than hunger. Their only clothes were British enlisted men's uniforms and it was cold, particularly at night. They slept on the bed boards, one remaining awake to guard against snoring and to listen, while the other slept. After five days, they were on the point of giving up. They were suffering from hunger and thirst, their bodies were stiff from lack of movement and from the cold, and there was then little possibility of getting out of the building undetected. However, they decided to try to stick it out a bit longer, for they could detect from the lessening activity around the camp, that the job of moving the prisoners was nearly complete.

Finally, on the sixth day, a terrific explosion shook the building, and one end of it dissolved into a heap of rubble, leaving a gaping hole at the other end of their attic. This, they knew, was an excellent avenue of escape, but it also pointed to another danger: Suppose they decided to complete the destruction of the building? That evening --- 8 October 43 --- they made their escape. As soon as it was dark, they crept on their bed boards to the point where the building had been blown away, and dropped to the ground.

They had been unable to judge the distance, but thought that it was something between 12 and 20 feet. They landed hard, each spraining an ankle, having fallen 30 feet. After lying still for a few moments, they stole through the skeleton guard unobserved, and were on their way.

The immediate problem was to find water. They had heard of two springs in the hills and set out to find them. Although their sprained ankles pained dreadfully, they were forced to continue onward. The next eight hours were spent in searching, during which they climbed a 4,000 foot hill, but found no water. Suddenly, in the very early dawn they were hailed by an Italian peasant who recognized their British uniforms and addressed them in English. The Italian was overjoyed upon finding that they were American officers. His father, he explained, had once lived in Brooklyn, and would be happy to assist Americans in every possible way. They walked with him for some time until he finally led them to the camouflaged entrance of a cave near his home. Upon entering, they found the Italian had other Allied guests: three British enlisted men. They were given water immediately, and after eating they went to sleep, thoroughly exhausted. They stayed in the cave for some time, resting and regaining their strength. Their ankles got stronger, and they began to feel more fit each day. When it grew cold in the mountains, the peasants started moving into the city, where it was warmest. Although their host was not going into the city, he decided that it might be a good idea if the escapees went into town with a friend of his. They accepted this chance eagerly, in the hope of making contact with the underground. After being provided with civilian clothes, they walked into town during the night.

Here they enjoyed themselves quite thoroughly, meeting friends of their host, and learning more about the war situation than they had been able to find out during their stay in prison. But this lasted only a week, as food was hard to get and there were too many Jerries. These Jerries, in civilian clothes, traveled everywhere hunting for escapees. Also, the German authorities frequently searched houses for food, animals and supplies, and they feared that they might be discovered during one of these searches, which were frequent, regular and systematic. These foraging Germans take whatever property they want, and shoot any civilian who shows the least objection to these thefts. The Italians are being bled white in retaliation of the armistice, and Fascist authorities are cooperating in every way with these German outrages. In their policy of always playing the winning side, the Fascists will undoubtedly double cross the Germans when the Allies arrive. The Fascist element, found chiefly in the cities, is thoroughly detested by most Italians, especially those living in the country. On the other hand, the Catholic Church is supporting the anti-fascists, giving them all the assistance possible, as well as sheltering Allied prisoners of war. Throughout occupied Italy, there are hundreds of Americans hiding in churches and being fed by civilians while waiting for an opportunity to escape. And this, despite the fact that the Germans offer an amount equal to two or three year's war time wages for each escapee turned in by a civilian.

When Lt. Hawkins and Lt. Gardiner left the city, they were taken to another farm in the mountains, this time much closer to the Allied lines. After a week, they made preparations to move again, with the idea of trying to work back through the German lines into Allied territory. Their new host had explained that they were welcome, but that he would be unable to keep them after the snow came. Moreover, the Germans were being driven back, and were moving into the valleys below. From among the escapees who were hiding at the farm house, they selected a Corporal of the British Infantry to accompany them. This choice was made after some thought. An infantry man, they reasoned, would have a greater knowledge of ground maps, the use of the compass, and the art of taking cover than they, being air personnel. When the snow came a few days later, they were ready to leave. They traveled over rough country, avoiding what roads there were, even though the best of these were mere cow trails. Small as these trails were, Jerries might, conceivably, be encountered on them. Extreme caution being necessary, they climbed a 7,000 foot mountain, whose top was covered with a mist or fog which would permit them more liberty of action if used as a cover. Their ankles were still bothering them and despite the hospitality of the Italians, they were still weak from undernourishment. The trip was painful, for the mountains were rugged. They had no cleats on their shoes, and consequently did quite a bit of sliding around. Frequently the Corporal had to push them or pull them over the rough spots. Traveling in this slow but persistent manner, they succeeded in covering considerable distance.

Once again, when they were urgently in need of food, water and sleep, they met a Sheppard, and were taken to his home. He explained that they could not stay, as he was giving shelter to quite a few men. Nevertheless they received food and much valuable information from him and the British Corporal made copies of maps. So once more they set out, after giving the Sheppard his "chit". A chit is a statement certifying that an American soldier has received assistance. When the holders of these chits turn them over to Allied authorities, they receive a monetary reward.

During the ensuing few days they hid out in the daytime, and traveled during the night. The country became less rugged and they covered a distance of about fifty-five miles with comparative ease. At one time they were walking along a dry creek bed and came to a bridge which they would have to pass under, and observed that it was heavily mined. The Corporal approached it very carefully for examination, and declared it safe so they went on their way again. About half an hour later, they heard a terrific explosion and looked around to see pieces of the bridge hurling through the air in all directions. Almost all of the railroad bridges in Italy are thus mined, as the Germans expect to destroy them before withdrawing. They have already begun to blow up towns and villages, after thoroughly looting them. This senseless and vengeful destruction is not only taking place in areas which are about to fall into Allied hands, as would be the case in a scorched earth policy, but all over Italy.

They continued onward again until one evening when they were approached by an Italian. He recognized them as Americans, and offered to get them through the lines. Though skeptical of his urban appearance, they were desperate, as they had no food and were again in need of water. Having no alternative but to take a chance, they listened to the Italian while he explained the situation. The nearest British positions, he stated, were only 18 kilometers away, but because of extensive German patrol work going on in this region, it would be necessary to travel by a round about route. After stumbling through eight hours of semi-darkness, they came to an unoccupied American jeep, casually parked in the wilderness. Knowing that Germans use American vehicles when they are available, all of them thought that their efforts to escape had been in vain --- that they were being led by this suspicious looking Italian back into a German camp, and were almost too tired to care. But a few seconds later, when they saw a sentry in British uniform, they knew that they were once more on Allied soil. They were so overcome that they rushed up and kissed the sentry, who, not knowing the circumstances, was kind of nasty about it. It was 03:30 hours, 16 December 1943.

I'm the co-pilot, I sit on the right
I'm not important, just part of the flight
I never talk back lest I have regrets
But I have to remember what the pilot forgets.

I make out the flight plan and study the weather
Pull up the gear and stand by to feather
Make out the forms and do the reporting
And fly the old crate when the pilot's a' courting.

I take the readings, adjust the power
Handle the flaps and call the tower
Tell him where we are on the darkest night
And do all the book work without any lights.

I call for my pilot and buy him cokes
I always laugh at his corny jokes
And once in a while when his landings are rusty
I come through with, "Gawd, but it's gusty!"

All in all I'm a general stooge
As I sit on the right with the man I call "Scrooge"
I guess you think that is past understanding
But maybe some day he will give me a landing.

428th BS War Diary: Additional Information for January 1944: December 8, 1943, the air echelon departed from Phillipville, Algeria, by C-47 transport, for Ghisonaccia, Corsica. The echelon was composed of sixty-three enlisted men and six officers commanded by Major Elmer H. Epperson, Squadron Commander.

Epperson, Elmer H., Maj, pilot, Commander

The first leg of the journey was completed the first day when we all landed at the airfield in Ajaccio, Corsica. A bivouac area was set up at the edge of the field and we settled down for a short stay awaiting transportation over the mountains. On December 9th the enlisted men were given passes to town. On their return to camp the biggest topic of conversation was the inflation. The franc had no value because of the scarcity of all items. One man was offered sixty dollars for a four-year-old pair of shoes he was wearing.

The following day two new Italian diesel busses picked up the entire group for a ride "deluxe" over the mountains. The pass between Ajaccio and Ghisonaccia was in pretty bad condition so a scheduled one way traffic had been arranged. The trip will long be remembered by everyone for its scenic beauty. After the drab hills of Africa it was a refreshing sight to all to see large snow-capped mountains and green plains. We arrived at our new base around five o'clock in the afternoon. The British were in command of the base and had evacuated all civilians from the town. We were assigned buildings and soon were comfortably quartered. It was very fortunate for us because immediately upon our arrival it began to rain and did not let up for three weeks.

The first mishap as a result of the rainy season was the landslide on this side of the pass. All bridges to Bastia had been blown up so we were literally trapped. Quartermaster had an estimated six days ration kit but no one was very worried. Very soon the simple system was arranged of having the rations brought from Ajaccio to the landslide, carried on foot from one side to the other, and then transported to the warehouse.

Christmas was nearing rapidly and the prospects for a merry one were bleak. Major Epperson turned a long room over to the enlisted men to make into a bar and club. Two days later "Ye Old Slab Bar Inn" was completed which would rival many rustic night spots back home. Several men formed a voluntary Christmas committee and decorated the room with a tree, pine boughs and wreaths. The army remembered us and sent up by air all the essentials for an old-fashioned Christmas turkey dinner. Our rear echelon sent a special plane up to bring in an unbelievably large mail call which we had by the tree on Christmas eve. Punch and a light lunch were served that night and everyone agreed that we had as merry a Christmas as was possible away from home.

We all pitched in to prepare the area for the entire squadron. So for the few weeks we had alone the time was taken up by pitching tents, hauling gravel and cleaning the area. On January 31, 1944, the first planes began to arrive and shortly after the whole flight echelon was with us again.

The main preoccupation in the early days of January was keeping warm. Mid-day was pleasant--as pleasant as the rugged beauty about us, but eh nights threw another light on the situation. The second most time-consuming effort was the attempt to arrange for the trip to Ghisonaccia. Road blocks, snow storms, land slides,--each contributed to the delay. The road across the mountains was a makeshift proposition necessitated by the thorough demolitions program of the enemy as he retreated. One officer of the engineers offered the information that it would take three years to reconstruct the bridges, roads, and railroads the Germans had effectively sabotaged.

Ajaccio was a poor third as a time consuming medium. The necessity of an early return, transportation and fuel shortages, our lack of contacts in a new area, and the needs of blackout security resulted in a more or less unofficial curfew, which made it difficult to have a really good time. Ajaccio is commodity poor and money rich. As in Africa the youngsters requested bon-bons in the accepted Oran style as in 1942. New and a revelation was the frequency one saw these beseeching urchins clutching 50 or 100 franc notes readily offered in exchange.

Surprising was the robust vitality of the populace. By comparison with the African modes of cleanliness and health, here was a super race of hardy human beings. The attire showed the effects of 4 years of war and clothing rationing, but a truly remarkable proportion of the feminine populace were smartly dressed. If there was a shortage of silk hose it certainly wasn't apparent. The first glance at an occidental civilization poor as Corsica was purported to be was one of the exhilarating experiences of our overseas tour.

It was not until we had the opportunity to visit the bars, venture a meal in a restaurant that the situation presented itself in a clearer light. To say that prices were high would be a banal understatement. Quite unfortunately there were Americans who regarded the natives as profiteers. Still, how could we expect five-franc wine when the children cavorted about offering the Corsican equivalent of a $2.00 bill. That our cigarettes, even Twenty Grands could bring better than $10.00 a carton was equally significant. A Corsican offered one of our mechanics $400. for his flying jacket. Now we can understand the apparent gusto with which our clothes were pilfered on board ship in spite of precautions.

On the morning of the 4th at 10:00 the convoy was under way, Ghisonaccia bound. That it took 9 hours to move something like 60 miles reflects the difficulties. The mountain passes were narrow, cold, and in places, slick with ice. We passed the vehicles of the RAF Regiment which had been on board the LST with us. They had been stranded for four days as a result of a snow storm. To those of us from the flatlands of the middle West, the snow-capped ridges of stubborn granite, the beautiful stand of pines, and the winding roads were deeply impressive. Then, as we gazed on the brooding beauty of the island, we could understand Napoleon's protestations of love for this comparatively barren island. It's easy to see why mountain peoples are self-reliant, patriotic, and strong. The environment is awe-inspiring. For this, the Corsicans are to be envied.

Ghisonaccia Gare--a town at a narrow gauge railway station which lies in the flatland bordering the hills near the East coast. The immediate environs were drab by comparison with the areas we had left in Corsica. Yet it proved to be the most snug and comfortable base we've had since we left England. The civilian populace had been evacuated to Ghisonaccia proper, another village four or five miles to the South.

For the time being we were all quartered in the buildings of the town. As a result, there was a close proximity between the various organizations that we hadn't had for a long time. The men on the line--as usual, had the toughest living conditions. The base's most glaring defect in our eyes was the great distance to any place of note--but that's nothing unusual for the 428th.

On the 10th, the "C", crews arrived from Phillipville bringing 40 officers and men. The 380th combat teams also arrived in similar force. It was apparent that operations were immediately beginning. That they could be was a pleasant surprise to us, for the transport and supply possibilities on the Island certainly didn't appear to be capable of supporting operational needs.

The base commander at the time was Group Captain Tuttle of the 328th Wing, of which he was also C.O. This RAF wing in turn was subordinated to the 63rd Fighter Wing at Bastia under the command of Brigadier General Graves. On the field a detachment of 14th Squadron Marauders (British) offered reconnaissance services, reporting ship sightings against which we might send attacks. Lt. Col. Harvey Hinman, the group Deputy Commander was our detachment commander.
